Roll for English

An Adventure Game to Make Learning Fun

Preparing the Game

Print all the pages after this one on US Letter (8.5” x 11”) paper. This includes:

- Instructions for Play.
- Eight species cards. (😳)
- Eight occupation cards. (⚕️ ⚔️ 💥)
- Eight item cards. (⚔️ 🛡️)
- Eight offensive spell cards. (💥)
- Eight healing ability cards. (⚕️)
- One or more maps.

For best results, use a color printer.

If desired, laminate the map for durability and making notations with dry erase markers.

Cut all the cards apart along their outlines. Place each card in a trading card sleeve if desired. The standard 2.5” x 3.5” sleeve will work best.

Gather additional materials needed for game play:

- Two six-sided (D6) dice, one for the party and one for the teacher’s aid game master.
- A poker chip, coin, or similar item to mark the party’s location on the map.

Use one of the included maps, or use the blank map to fill in your own lesson objectives. There are 42 path spaces on the map.

Instructions for Play

Gather into groups of four students. This will be your adventure party. One teacher's assistant will join each group to serve as the game master.

Students in the party choose one species card (🙂) and one occupation card (⚕️ ⚔️ 💥). These two cards make up your character.

The teacher's assistant shuffles the the item / ability cards and places six of each type near the corresponding special spaces. (⚔️ and 🛡️ by the armory, ⚕️ by church, and 💥 by the wizard tower.) The remaining six cards are shuffled again and placed at the ancient ruins.

All members of the party start at the Inn space on the map. Use a coin or other marker to show the location of the party.

Students in the party take turns rolling a D6 die and moving forward that many spaces.

When moving the party practices saying what's printed on each space they pass. The teacher's assistant will help and provide examples. Advanced students may want to use their own examples.

When a special space is encountered on the way (armory, church, wizard tower, ancient ruins), the party stops. The die is then rolled to select a item / ability card from the deck before continuing.

Students in the party proceed until the Dragon's Lair is reached. Once there, the students use their item / ability cards and a D6 die to attack the dragon. The teacher's assistant uses a D6 die to attack in return.

Play ends when either the dragon or the party is defeated.

Rules of Combat

To keep the focus of he game on learning, the rules of combat are greatly simplified compared to similar adventure games.

The opening round of attack is always: warrior, wizard, dragon.

Players use cards they have collected and a D6 roll to determine how effective they are. The dragon always attacks with a D6 roll for flame damage.

After the dragon attacks, a second defending warrior may counter attack or use a shield to deflect some of the dragon's damage.

The cleric is also given a chance to cast a healing spell at the end of the round.

After damage points are calculated, hit points are subtracted from the party members and the dragon. Combat continues while the dragon is still alive.

Additional rounds are similar to the opening round, with warrior and wizard attacking, then the dragon attacking, then the second warrior counter-attacking, and finally, the cleric healing.

It is the responsibility of a good game master to focus the dragon's attacks on the players with the most remaining hit points so no one player is knocked out of the game too quickly. In other words, don't be a jerk and barbecue the wizard straight away.

The game master is also given flexibility when determining the dragon's hit points. Make the party work for the victory, but let them win. Remember, the goal is to learn English!

Sample Game

Four students (the party) and one teacher's assistant (game master) gather around the game board of verbs. The teacher's assistant sets up the game's special space cards while the students choose their characters.

The party chooses two warriors, one wizard, and one cleric.

The party's position marker is placed at The Inn. This is where play begins.

One student in the party rolls a single six-sided die. In this example, a one is rolled. The students' party marker is moved forward one space to the verb, Be.

Students in the party practice saying the word Be and using its conjugations. For example: "I am a student," "I will be practicing English," "She is the cleric in our party."

The next student in the party rolls the die and for this example, a four is rolled.

The party is now on the Go verb space. Students practice using the verb Go.

The Go space is adjacent to the Armory, and the Armory is a special space. Before moving on, one of the warriors in the party rolls the die to determine which weapon / shield card will be drawn from the deck.

The warrior rolls a three. The top two cards from the weapon / shield deck are moved to the bottom of the deck and the warrior keeps the third card off the top.

Because there are two warriors in the party, the second warrior takes the next card off the deck.

The party continues rolling and practicing verbs they encounter on the path. Eventually, the party lands on the Take verb space.

The next roll is a six. The party does not pass by the Church, even though the six roll would put them on Need.

The party stops on a space beside the Church while the cleric rolls to select a healing spell card from the deck. Once the card has been drawn, the party continues on to the Need space.

The party continues to roll and practice verbs along the path. When the party's marker is adjacent to the Wizard's Tower, the wizard in the party rolls the die to determine which spell card is taken.

The party keeps moving forward, practicing verbs, until the Ancient Ruins special space is encountered.

A party member rolls the die and selects a single card from the deck. A Healing Touch card is drawn. This card is passed to the party's cleric, because only the cleric can use healing spells.

Play continues until the Dragon's Lair is reached.

The first warrior has a Battle Axe card. Following the instructions on the Battle Axe card, the warrior rolls the die to get a four, then adds one additional point.

The game master subtracts five from the dragon's hit points.

The wizard is next, and using the Fireball card, rolls a two.

The game master subtracts two more points from the dragon's hit points.

The game master rolls for the dragon. The game master chooses to attack the wizard. A three is rolled. Three points of damage are subtracted from the wizard's hit points.

The party's cleric is next and has a Heavenly Grace card, but elects to save the spell and instead use only Thoughts & Prayers to restore one point to the wizard.

The party's second warrior has a Bronze Shield card and rolls a five. This effectively blocks the remaining hit points and the wizard is again at full health.

The first warrior in the party takes a second turn using the Battle Axe and rolls a two. Since this is the second attack, no addition point is granted.

The game master subtracts two more hit points from the dragon and chooses the cleric for an attack.

The game master rolls a five and five hit points are subtracted from the cleric.

The cleric casts another Thoughts & Prayers spell and regains one hit point.

The second warrior uses the Bronze Shield and rolls a one. The cleric regains one more hit point.

The first warrior uses Battle Axe again, rolling a six.

The game master determines there is enough damage to slay the dragon and the party wins!

Dragonborn Born of dragons, but walking upright on two legs. The Dragonborn combine the best traits of humans and dragons. 🙂	Dwarf People of the mountain kingdoms.
